the resulting disappointment when it is known that the report states that both sides have violated the armistice agreement but that it is impossible now to establish who really fired the first shot. Whether practical conclusions should be drawn from these observations, which one has reason to suspect are not the individual impression but a fairly general and widespread one, is another matter. But one must another matter, and that people consider the fact that people consider the fact that people abroad now follow events in this country with somewhat less than breathless tension and the colleague who began his cable on Triday noting "much concern" at U.N. Headquarters wisely did not elaborate on that point, And one must also face the fact that verbal warfare, especially if not accompanied by deeds, is agt to irritate and antagonise people no less than military settions. But while the intter course would at least cause some real changes, verbal warfare fuifils a unigle function: it lets off steam. But it appears highly doubtful whether one can afford that in the long run. Jerusalem, July 4.

that this is by no means the thirstiest part of the country. To confine the "new" water to it would mean to parch extensive tracts of irrigable land further south.

extensive trarts of irrigable land further south.

It would seem that a fairer basis of allocation could be worked out without too much difficulty. The absorptive capacity of the Arab States could be satisfied fully, including provision for the resettlement of refugees as envisaged in the Main Plan, and yet leave for Israel's enjoyment a larger volume of water than the restrictive interpretation of the "beneficial use" principle would allow her. This would make sure that no water was wasted on the Arab side for political reasons, while amply meeting every objective Arab need; and for Israel it would open up possibilities which she regards as essential for her industrial and agricultural development in the years to come.

Misgivings have been aroused in this country by the suggestion that the water resources of the area might come under international control. These mingivings are natural.
